The Chinese authorities have put much emphasis on graphic arts in propoganda. If a worker shows any aptitude as a cartoonist he is given further instruction at night classes and supplied with all the materials required. In some cases, people with absolutely no creative talent are selected as cartoonists and, instead of teaching them to draw, they are furnished with glass-top tables which are illuminated from below and given published cartoons which they trace and color. It seems that every industry as a full-time cartoonist originating or copying posters which carry visual messages for the workers.
